Albariño

/ahl-bah-ree-nyoh/

Albariño is a dry white wine produced from a wine grape variety that is best known in the Iberian Peninsula countries of Spain and Portugal. Its popularity in California is on the rise with approximately 347 acres planted in 2017. The first known California planting was in 1992. This white wine grape generally produces a light colored, aromatic and high acid light to medium bodied wine that often exhibits ripe citrus and stone fruit flavors.

Welcome to our International Albariño Day celebration!
Albariño is available for tasting and purchase at all of the wineries listed here. Please explore them all and discover new wines!

Lodi Overview - Tour of Albariño

A historic winegrowing region since the 1850s, Lodi's Mediterranean climate and distinct soils allow its growers to cultivate 125 winegrape varieties, making Lodi the most diverse winegrowing region in the United States. Among this vast number of varieties, Albariño has gained a solid foothold in Lodi, becoming the region's fastest growing white wine category. In fact, Lodi accounts for 20% of California's total production of this delightfully refreshing white wine. The leader in California's winegrape production, Lodi is also a leader in sustainable viticulture, its LODI RULES for sustainable winegrowing program the first in America. Today, there are more than 55,000 acres certified throughout California, in Washington, and Israel. For more information about the Lodi winegrowing region or LODI RULES, visit lodiwine.com and lodirules.org.
